6 pm Networking - 6:30 Dinner meeting - 7:30 Program

Diversity and inclusion of women and other underrepresented groups on workforce teams impact social justice and innovation. Social justice resonates with us as "it's the right thing to do," as a humanitarian call for fairness, equal representation, and opportunity, within both academia and other industries. Its roots are derived from civil rights and feminism, backed by decades of social progress and research. Innovation is a more recent phenomenon, resulting from best practices and research that points to the competitive advantages of diverse work teams along dimensions of innovation, productivity, efficiency, and problem solving.
